"Integrating Institute of Medicine (IOM) Core Competency of Evidence-Based Management Practice with Senior Leadership Nursing Students"

Nursing students should understand that evidence-based management (EBM) practice is important to their clinical experiences as well as evidence-based practice (EBP). Institute of Medicine (IOM) has strongly encouraged schools of nursing to include EBM in their curriculum so students can utilize both EBM and EBP in their clinical experiences. Therefore, their practice is based on sound research and scientific methods (Finkelman, & Kenner, 2012). The American Organization of Nurse Executive (AONE) addresses the importance of evidence-based management practice in their strategic objectives which states, "Encouraging the utilization of evidence-based management practice and sound research to explore and support the interrelations of technology, facility design and patient care delivery models" (AONE, 2012, p.2). The purpose of this project is to provide an environment for senior leadership nursing students to select a current leadership/management research article with an emphasis on leadership principles and its application to the practice in nursing leadership and management. The nursing student discusses their analysis and application to their current leadership clinical experience with their faculty.
